AROUND the TOWNSHIP

Thousands of visitors from all parts of California and other states will be in Niles during the next few weeks for the annual out door bulb show at the California Nursery Company. Few cities are as fortunate as Niles in having such a flower garden at her front door and a picturesque canyon at the back.

Main street is going to decorate its windows in honor of the bulb show. The Children's Hospital branches, to be assisted by the Country Club ladies, are going to sell sandwiches at the Old Adobe for the benefit of the hospital. The nursery serves tea and all visitors are invited to participate in this hospitality.

Cubs of the Niles pack are assisting at the bulb show at the California Nursery Company. They also have an exhibit of craft work which will be on display during the show. Scouts are likewise assisting and the Toyon Berries are helping the Toyon Branch sell sandwiches for the Children's Hospital.

After the first thousand years, Niles will probably wake up to the fact that the bulb show is a community asset, as important in a way to this small community as the exposition is to the west coast. Maybe more so, for it happens every year.

The baby chicks recently auctioned at the Centerville postoffice when no one claimed them should have been addressed to Centerville, Washington, a few miles away from the shipper, instead of to Centerville, Calif. There are several other "Centervilles, California" our ownest own being the only metropolis—the others are only wide places in the road not even boasting a post office.

Tony "Shiser" Martin, firefighter and 1938 manager of the Newark ball club, is rushing completion of a commodious "house" to be presented to his daughter on her birthday in the near future. There should be years of playing pleasure in the structure for the little miss.

Al Pashote, who hopes to be manager of the Newark ball club in 1940, has installed a fence around his home providing an extensive playground for his young hopeful, Donald.

PRINCIPAL RATHBONE WILL ATTEND STATE EDUCATORS' SESSION

CENTERVILLE—The Coordinating Council at the Washington Union High School got another boost this week. Principal A. J. Rathbone was asked to sit in on a panel discussion of Coordinating Councils at a meeting of the State Department of Education at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco on April 2, 3 and 4.

Also a letter came recently from San Luis Obispo where a new council is to be formed stating that "according to Kenneth Beam, executive secretary of California Coordinating Councils, Inc., the Centerville Council is one of the best in the state." Outlines of program were asked.

SON OF FRANKENSTEIN AT NILES THEATRE

NILES—Bringing a galaxy of stars on the screen, the celebrated picture, "Son of Frankenstein" will be at the Niles Theatre for two evenings on next Wednesday and Thursday, March 22 and 23. Perhaps one of the most talked of films of the current year's releases, the management of the local show house has been congratulating themselves on securing the picture for such an early showing. On the same bill will be John Howard in "Arrest Bulldog Drummond."

CAFETERIA AT HIGH SCHOOL OFFERS NO LOCAL COMPETITION

CENTERVILLE—That the cafeteria nor any other facilities of the Washington Union High School can be used by outside groups in a way that would place the school in a competitive situation with local business men was decided at a recent meeting of the board of trustees.

"In short", Principal A. J. Rathbone explained, "if outside groups can be accommodated at any other place in the township, then the high school will not furnish quarters for meetings or entertainments to these groups. In cases where accommodations cannot be secured elsewhere, the school is glad for the community to have the benefit of its facilities."

Township Principals Advocate Changes In Schools During Year

CENTERVILLE—Three changes in administration of Washington Township schools were advocated at a meeting of principals at the high school Monday afternoon.

The first, to be greeted with whoops of joy by the students, and it is believed by a majority of the teachers, is to abolish the county board examinations held each year for eighth grade classes prior to entrance to high school. It is said that Alameda is one of four counties to retain this antiquated custom.

The second suggestion is a uniform opening and closing date for schools in the township, Sept. 11, being the opening date advocated and June 14, the closing, including 180 school days.

The three days holiday at Thanksgiving for the annual teachers' institute will be replaced by one holiday on Wednesday prior to Thanksgiving and sectional round table conferences to be held during the year in afternoon or evening hours to take the place of the Monday and Tuesday sessions of the institute. Principals will recommend these three changes to Superintendent Edgar Muller.

E. A. Ellsworth reported that 44 signatures had been made to petitions to enlarge the fire district. He was instructed to contact Supervisor George Hellwig as to the next procedure. It is understood the insurance rate will decrease five cents and the fire tax from 30 to 10 cents or less when the entire school district is included in the fire district.

The chamber voted to cooperate with the California Nursery Co., in their annual bulb show to be held at the nursery beginning tomorrow for five weeks. All main street stores will decorate their windows with Spring blossoms in celebration of the bulb show.

IDENTIFY BODY OF MAN FOUND DEAD NEAR MT. EDEN

ALVARADO—Daniel Riley and Manuel Mattos of Alvarado identified the body of a man found dead near Mt. Eden last Friday as that of Patrick Dolan, 55, caretaker of an Alvarado ranch.

An itinerant was held for questioning as investigator sought to determine whether Dolan was a murder or accident victim. According to autopsy surgeons, the man died from a cerebral hemorrhage, cause of which they recorded as unknown. Some officials thought Dolan had been slain by a blow on the head and possibly transpired to the tracks, others believed he had been struck by a slow-moving train.

Dolan leaves a sister, Mrs. Mary Ahern, 1547 34th street, Oakland, and a brother, Thomas Dolan, 2187 East 27th Street.

Rotarians Launch Series Of Programs On Building Project

NILES—The first of a series of programs dealing with building problems was given at last week's meeting of the Niles Rotary Club in connection with their project of building a house to be sold in Niles.

Dangers and treatment for termites, "the hidden enemy" were discussed by W. H. Allee of the Terminix of Northern California, Inc., with George Bonde as chairman of the day. He showed a motion picture starring Lowell Thomas who showed various evidences of damage by termites and something of the nature of this pest.

The modern way of combatting this danger was also shown. Chemical treatment of timbers prevents inroads of the termite. Temite insurance can be purchased on five year programs, the chemical used by this company having proved 90 per cent effective after it was first put on the market 17 years ago.

Allee warned builders against having any wood structure touch the ground. Absence of chips and other trash under buildings will aid in keeping away termites who feed on anything containing cellulose. These insects were known in the days of the dinosaurs, 50 million years ago. Since forests have been depleted in recent years, the migration of termites has become an increasing menace to home and public buildings.

C. W. Kraft reported that the building committee had turned over preliminary plans to an architect for consultation but that no location for the Rotary house had been chosen.

E. F. Glassbrook was chairman of this week's meeting with a speaker on soil conservation scheduled to be present.

George Smith reported on the "On to Reno" conference to be held in that city, May 1, 2 and 3. Reservations are being made for Rotarians and their wives or "stag" groups.

CONSTRUCTION STARTS ON NEW HOME IN NILES SUBDIVISION

NILES—Building activities are beginning to be noted in Adobe Acres, Niles newest subdivision, on the Alvarado-Niles road, across from the California Nursery Company. Construction started this week on a new home for J. A. MacDonald, superintendent at the nursery.

Negotiations are also under way for two other new homes in this tract. Taking advantage of the planting season, George C. Roeding, president of the nursery which is in charge of Adobe Acres, has planted more than 200 pine trees along the west side as a screen and windbreak. Twenty fruit trees have been planted on the rear section of each of the 52 lots in the tract.

The MacDonald home is to be of early California farm house design. Frederick Reimers of San Francisco is the architect and E. E. Dias of Niles, contractor.

Flower Lovers Will Make Annual Visit To Niles Bulb Show

NILES—Once more Niles is host to thousands of flower lovers who will make their annual trek to the California Nursery Company's outdoor bulb show which opens tomorrow and continues for five weeks.

A warm Spring and recent rains have left the gardens unusually beautiful, daffodils, flowering shrubs and other Spring blossoms offering a sight of rare beauty.

Each Sunday afternoon strolling musicians will furnish entertainment in the Old Adobe garden. Tea will be served all visitors by the nursery and sandwiches will be sold for the benefit of the Children's Hospital of the East Bay. The Toyon Branch has charge of the sale under the direction of Mrs. James R. Whipple and is being assisted by the Toyon Berries and the Country Club of Washington Township.

More than 30 clubs in the Bay section have already signed up for meeting days at the nursery during the bulb show. Last Monday, the garden class of Washington Union High School under the leadership of Mrs. Martha Phillips visited the show. On Tuesday, Future Farmers from Morgan Hill were present. Albert Wilson's gorup from Redwood City were among the week's visitors. The Country Club will hold its regular April meeting at the Old Adobe on April 4. The Hillsboro club will meet that same day. The Diablo Men's Garden Club will meet here tomorrow.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reviewed by CARTER FIELD

Too much build-up is turning Harry Hopkins' oratorical efforts into a dud ... Cutting federal expenses and balancing the budget is seen a virtual impossibility ... New Deal will feel the loss of Joseph B. Keenan's political sagacity.

WASHINGTON.—Whatever else may be said of Harry L. Hopkins' "appeasement" speech, intended to start the wheels of prosperity turning again in this country and to pave the way to his own nomination and election next year, very little poker strategy was shown. The build-up was wrong. The timing was calculated badly. And finally, it became evident that Hopkins simply does not have the golden radio voice of his chief.

On this last point, one wonders if Mr. Roosevelt is really doing his best by this, his second candidate to succeed him in the White House—whether Hopkins, like Robert H. Jackson, is not being "given a run" like a candidate at a presidential convention. For it would seem to the most casual student of Mike Oratory that the President must have known that Harry was not big time so far as broadcasting is concerned, and that he could be improved quite considerably by a little training.

Most people, for instance, figure that Herbert Hoover would like another try for the White House brass ring, but nevertheless he did advise Thomas E. Dewey, just before Dewey entered the New York gubernatorial race, that his oratory simply must be improved. And no one should know better than Hoover, who as secretary of commerce and as President was one of the worst ever known—until Alf M. Landon—but who turned himself, in the opinion of many observers, into the best orator the Republican party has by the time he had been out of the White House for four years.

Promised His Head Off; Final Effort Became Dud

Coming back to Hopkins' strategy, or lack of it, it is possible that he could not avoid one big mistake. Looking at the whole affair coldly, it is probable that if Hopkins had made that same speech three months earlier it would have been a wow. The whole country would have talked of nothing else for weeks. Business would have been electrified. Everybody knowing how close he was to the President, it would have marked a dramatic and spectacular milestone.

What had happened in that three months to make it seem an anticlimax? To have made it, frankly, a disappointment to business as well as to Hopkins' boosters?

The answer is simple. There had been too much build-up. The trouble was that Hopkins meantime had been nominated for secretary of commerce, and had to get himself confirmed. Not only that, he had to go far enough in his campaign to get confirmed to avoid any serious fight over his confirmation. Anything else might have thrown him off what seemed like a clear track leading to the White House before he could get steam up.

So he promised his head off, not in an interview but in dozens. He had half a dozen "spokesmen" on the conservative side in the senate telling their colleagues, and newspaper men, and business men back home, just how safe and sane Harry was going to be. He was specific in his pledges, left nothing to the imagination.

In fact, he said so much, and it was relayed so widely, that it is no wonder his final public effort was a dud.

Balancing the Budget Is Seen Virtual Impossibility

The virtual impossibility of cutting federal expenditures and balancing the budget is clearly demonstrated in the recent senate vote on the proposal to cut $4,262,000 from the TVA appropriation. It is significant because this was the most logical place for congress to cut this particular bill if it were to be cut at all.

The point is that the house, in cutting more than four times that amount from the TVA appropriation, had included in the projects to be discontinued the Gilbertsville dam, on which the government has already expended some millions of dollars, and which in addition is recognized by all engineers as important not only to the navigation and flood control of the Tennessee river, but to the lower Ohio and Mississippi rivers as well.

In short, it is easy to see that the most determined man to cut appropriations in all congress might easily have been swayed to vote for the Gilbertsville dam money. On this particular point there was no roll call. It was approved by a voice vote.

But on the four-million-dollar appropriation there was no such argument calculated to appeal to senators who want the federal government to balance its budget. Yet the vote to put the appropriation into the bill—to go on spending—was 49 to 31. As four additional senators were paired in favor of the appropriation, the total strength for it was actually 53, four more than a majority of the entire body.

Really Is Part and Parcel Of Old Pork-Barrel System

The really discouraging phase of the whole matter to those who see the necessity of budget balancing has nothing to do with the merits of this particular appropriation. In fact, it is not unfair to say that most of the senators who voted for it were not primarily voting on its merits at all. Some of them were voting for the additional dam because they believe in the government going further into the electrical business. Some of them did so because they knew the White House wanted it. Some of them want to round out the TVA project.

For example, had Arthur E. Morgan been a member of the senate when this vote was taken, he would of course have voted for the appropriation, despite his bitter criticisms of David E. Lilienthal, and, inferentially, of President Roosevelt, in the conduct of TVA affairs.

But the really discouraging point is that it is part and parcel of the old pork-barrel system. It will be noted that the senators from many of the states which hope for more federal spending on dams and river control projects went along with the majority.

New Deal Feels Loss of Keenan's Political Wisdom

The stepping out of the New Deal circle of Joseph B. Keenan, who has been assistant attorney general, leaves really no one on the inside, so to speak, whose knowledge of practical politics and political intelligence commands very much respect on Capitol Hill, with the notable exception, of course, of the President himself.

It has frequently been a matter of comment that Mr. Roosevelt, from the day he yielded to Alfred E. Smith's urging that he run for governor of New York in 1928, did not make a single serious political mistake until he had entered on his second presidential term. It is also frequently pointed out that a great many positive actions, which were of the highest order of political sagacity, contributed to his success in the period a little short of seven years which is included in this span.

His first political mistake, according to the consensus on Capitol Hill, was his proposal for the enlargement of the Supreme court, made in January, 1937. Then followed the purge, and a long list of actions which approach the definition of an old-time political leader that "it was worse than a crime, it was a blunder."

Many critics insist that it is not merely a coincidence that during the brilliant—always measuring by the test of pure political judgment, and not by whether the actions were otherwise sound or unsound—period Mr. Roosevelt had the advantage of the advice of loyal Louis McHenry Howe, and that the period since, when blunders have been frequent, came after Howe's death.

Farley Definitely Excluded From Political Councils

Be that as it may, the administration is recognized as having definitely excluded James A. Farley from its political councils almost ever since the 1936 election.

The President actively entered three of the purge contests himself. In one case, Maryland, Farley is known to have hoped that Senator Millard E. Tydings would be defeated, though his judgment was that it could not be done. In fact, he is known to have told close friends, during the Maryland primary, to bet on Tydings. In the other two cases where the President personally spoke his wishes to the voters, South Carolina and Georgia, Farley not only thought the purge could not succeed but did not agree with it. In short he would have opposed fighting Walter F. George and Cotton Ed (E. D.) Smith even if he had been sure he could beat them.

Considering the whole picture after Howe died, and when Farley's political judgment was being ignored, Joe Keenan, who was the ace politician of the New Deal, so to speak, did not make a very favorable record. But Keenan is not blamed for this. He did not make the big decisions. He simply tried to carry out the orders once they had been given.

Farley is not apt to regain his political leadership. The New Dealers regard him as a candidate for the presidency himself.

HEALTH

• Rapid heart beat is often found in healthy individuals of all ages.

By Dr. James W. Barton

"THE term paroxysmal tachycardia is when the heart rate suddenly becomes rapid and after a variable time—a few seconds, hours, or days—just as suddenly goes back to its normal rate." During an attack the heart rate may go as high as 250 beats to the minute and then drop to a rate of 72 to 76. The cause of this very rapid beating of the heart is unknown but something—shock, worry, disappointment—interferes with the "starter" of the heart beats and the heart gets out of its regular rhythm or regularity.

Fortunately the great majority of cases occur in the two heart chambers—the auricles—which receive the blood, not the two chambers—ventricles—from which the blood is pumped to lungs, and to all the other parts of the body. This auricle type is not dangerous.

Dr. W. Ford Connell in Canadian Medical Association Journal states: "Paroxysmal auricular tachycardia is found in healthy adults of all ages. Heart disease may or may not be present. This very rapid beating may be just for a few beats or it may go on for as long as six days. Attacks lasting a few minutes are much the commonest. Neither exercise nor drugs makes any change in the rate whereas in a normal heart or a diseased heart, drugs and exercise affect the rate."

Attacks Stop Suddenly

Most persons feel discomfort during an attack—a fluttering in the chest or pounding in the neck.

Usually no treatment is necessary as the attacks stop suddenly without treatment. Many of these individuals have learned some method of preventing or shortening an attack by stimulating the large nerves supplying heart, lungs, and digestive apparatus. Thus holding the breath or pressing with the fingers on first one eyeball and then the other, or pressing firmly on the large blood vessel in front of neck which can be seen to bulge if watched closely, or the drinking of ice water, or by bringing on a vomiting spell, often stops an attack. The drug that has been found most useful is quinidine (not quinine) and it can be given by mouth, five grains every hour for 10 hours.

As this very rapid heart beat naturally alarms the individual, Dr. Connell suggests that its lack of danger be explained.

Excess Tissue Water May Cause Epilepsy

It is sometimes difficult to tell whether a patient is hysterical or having an epileptic attack or "fit." However, in epilepsy the patient is always unconscious and may do harm to himself—biting his tongue or others if not protected. In hysteria the patient is not unconscious and is aware of all that he is doing and all that is going on about him. He is usually, but not always, trying to be the center of attention. This is called a defensive mechanism.

While the cause of epilepsy is still unknown, investigators have found that food is a factor in causing attacks, as a group of 11 epileptics, having one or more attacks a day, were kept entirely free of attacks by being starved for 10 days. Other investigators then found that if liquids were reduced the epileptic attacks stopped, occurred less often or were not so severe. From this finding—excess water in the tissues causes epilepsy—a test for epilepsy has been discovered.

Epilepsy Test Perfected. Drs. McQuarrie and Peeler, in Journal of Clinical Investigation, tell of their study of the effects of using extract of the pituitary gland in cases of suspected epilepsy. This extract—pitressin—has the effect of preventing the escape of water from the tissues by way of the kidneys. The patients were forced to drink water and were then given the pitressin. In cases of true epilepsy this forced drinking of water and the keeping of it in the body by means of the pitressin brought on epileptic attacks. A series of other individuals who were forced to drink large quantities of water and were also given pitressin did not have any attacks.

The point then is that before giving the regular treatment for epilepsy to patients it should first be learned, by this method, that the case is really epileptic.

The present successful treatment: 1. Cutting down by one-half on all starch foods—bread, sugar, potatoes, pastries. 2. Cutting down by one-half on all liquids—water, tea, coffee, milk, cocoa, soft or hard drinks. 3. Increasing the fat foods—butter, cream, fat meats. 4. A daily dose of phenobarbital as prescribed by a physician.

Television Sprouts Commercial Wings, Backed by 10 Years' Experimentation

Receivers Placed on Sale As Infant Industry Tests Apparatus

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

History will remember April of 1939 as the month America became television-conscious.

The research of more than 10 years, the expenditure of more than $10,000,000 will be climaxed when radio manufacturers place commercial television receivers on the market for the first time.

At least this announcement was made last October by David Sarnoff of the Radio Corporation of America, speaking for the American Radio Manufacturers' association. Simultaneously, when the New York World's fair opens April 30, commercial telecasting will begin in the Manhattan metropolitan area.

Before the year is out additional transmitters will be operating commercially at Schenectady and (possibly) Los Angeles.

But this most fascinating of modern sciences will still be wearing short trousers, ensnared in more technical, economic and artistic difficulties than the complicated motion picture industry ever imagined.

Strange to say, the least of these problems is that of technique. Ten years ago visionary television engineers dreamed of the great future in this business, once equipment could be perfected. The weird situation today is that television is mechanically quite perfect but programming and financing have been neglected.

Horizon is Maximum Distance

The receivers going on sale next month will project an 8 by 10-inch image into your living room, provided you live within horizon-range of the Empire State building or a 1,500 foot mountain near Schenectady. Also provided you can pay from $150 to $1,000 for a receiver. The former has sight only, the latter both sound and sight.

Behind that image in your living room is a devastating complexity of electrons, light beams, photography and ultra-short waves. Standing before a camera in the Empire State building, your favorite politician will harangue his no-longer-unseen audience with gestures as well as vocal inflections, all of which are picked up by a camera-sound combination. Whereas a regularly photographed image is transferred to the plate chemically, television does it electrically on a plate made up of several thousand tiny silver dots which react electrically to light.

The trick is that these silver dots are arranged regularly in lines

The National Broadcasting company's television announcer, Betty Goodwin, steps before a television camera in the Radio City studios, New York.

Betty Goodwin's image is televised, shot through the air by electric impulses, and comes out this way.

so ultra-short waves. Highly independent, they proceed in a straight line out over the horizon and zip off to space, never returning. Consequently, all television audiences are confined to eye-shot of the transmitting station.

The one exception is that broadcasts may be "piped" from one city to another with coaxial cable, but a mile of this wire costs a small fortune and it is therefore impractical.

'Ghosts' Cause Interference

Even on ultra-short wave and within the horizon radius, television does not always have clear sailing. "Ghosts" pop up occasionally in the form of reflecting surfaces which send an extra delayed image into the receiver. Empire State building broadcasts often encounter a ghost in the Palisades, a vertical wall of rock on the Jersey side of the Hudson river. Large surfaces like gas tanks also provide ghosts.

Sometimes freak waves may be reflected from the ionosphere, producing ghosts of broadcasts being made miles away on the same wavelength. During the past winter Dr. DeWitt R. Goddard, working on television at Riverhead, L. I.,

Atop the peak of the world's tallest building, New York's Empire State building, can be seen the new apparatus erected for television broadcasts. Since television waves are not reflected back to earth, they are effective only to the horizon visible from the top of the broadcasting apparatus.

across the plate. There are 441 lines on the full plate and by the time each is filled with its light and dark dots you have a finished picture not entirely different from the halftone pictures used to illustrate this story. Examine the pictures closely and you'll see the dots.

From Dots to Impulses

Somehow, these television dots are transferred to electric impulses, amplified and shot through the air to receivers, whence the picture is recreated bit by bit. All this takes place in about one-thirtieth of a second. Since each complete image contains 200,000 dots, you get 6,000,000 a second, which is a lot of dots.

There's good reason for television's narrow broadcasting range. To transmit both pictures and sound requires a "channel" six times the distance from top to bottom of your radio dial, which means that television must turn to the unexplored field of ultra-short waves. Here is encountered still another problem. Regular "long" radio waves shoot into the air, bounce off the ionosphere and come back to earth. Not received fairly clear images televised from London and bounced off the ionosphere.

Artistically television compares with motion pictures. Only it has more ramifications. The first performance must be letter-perfect because it is the last performance. There are no retakes to correct poorly acted scenes, nor any time to debate the proper instant to "fade-in" a second or third camera. Technicians, actors and audience are constantly alert, which indicates the change television may make in your home life.

New Field for Programming

Once established, television holds tremendous program possibilities. Writing for the Christian Science Monitor, Volney D. Hurd visualizes evening foreign affairs discussions with the commentator pointing out spots of interest on the map of Europe. A few minutes later news events of the day may be recreated by motion pictures taken at the actual scene a few hours earlier. The next morning a cooking school will show someone actually preparing food. Visual education broadcasts will become an important factor in training both children and adults.

If $10,000,000 has already been spent to bring television into its present infancy, many more millions must be spent to give it the polish of our modern radio programs. The distance handicap and the expense of "piping" may be technical problems, but they're business problems, too. Add to this the fact that a half-hour television production will cost $60,000 (over one station) while a full-hour sound radio show costs only $30,000 over the complete national hookup.

These things frighten would-be sponsors. Many firms now using sound radio would gladly invest $60,000 in a half-hour television show—provided they got something in return. But in New York, where American television has reached its highest development, the number of receivers by next December will be far less than 10,000. It's simply not worthwhile to spend $6 on each of these possible 10,000 prospects!

Population Counts

Meanwhile, however, televisionists realize the New York metropolitan area will—by virtue of its population—be the first site of self-liquidating operations. That's why experimentation and sale of commercial receivers is being confined largely to this vicinity.

Much can be learned from England's experience. Youthful John L. Baird began experimenting with British television back in 1925 and today there are 10,000 receivers in the 30 to 50-mile radius surrounding Alexandria palace, London. This, incidentally, includes more than 25 per cent of the total population of England and Wales, making British television more feasible commercially. Two systems are used, the Emitron camera—which like the American method—uses electrical signals, and the Scophony system which uses a mechanical process and "scans" by strips instead of dots. The latter camera permits televised pictures to be reproduced on a large screen, encouraging the development of television theaters.

Don't expect television too quickly; in fact, be thankful its pioneers are holding back their achievement until they've something more permanent to offer, otherwise your investment might be a total loss. In the opinion of the federal communication commission, television is not ready for standardization or commercial use by the general public. But by the time 1939 is out this viewpoint may change.

Iran, Egypt Royalty Wed In Splendor

CAIRO.—A wedding ceremony whose complexities and magnificence outshine any in modern history is uniting 17-year-old Princess Fawzia of Egypt and the youthful crown prince of Iran (Persia). Celebrations started long before March 16, the wedding date, and will continue long after, to be culminated April 21 in a second marriage ritual in Teheran, Iran capital.

Important because it unites the two most influential Mohammedan nations, the wedding is nevertheless said to be a love match since the prince and princess met during a winter sports expedition to Switzerland. A million Egyptians are participating in the gayety of Cairo, a three-day holiday having been proclaimed following the wedding.

A royal welcome, aerial and military escorts and special trains featured the prince's arrival in Egypt. In his honor the tomb of Mohammed Ali—founder of the present Egyptian dynasty—was reconstructed at a cost of $250,000.

The royal couple are being accompanied by Egyptian Queen Mother Nazi on their honeymoon trip to Shahpour, Iran. There they will be met by the empress of Iran and two of her daughters. The party will travel by special train to Teheran for four days of wedding celebration beginning April 21. On April 24 the prince will take his bride to their permanent residence, the marble palace. Since this date is the anniversary of the accession to the throne of the shah of Persia, it will have a double significance this year.

Princess Fawzia, westernized like Egypt's beautiful young queen, Farida, is well versed in her native Arabic and speaks excellent English and French. Her next problem will be learning modern Persian, her new native tongue.

LONE GIRL VISITS IN HEAD-HUNTERS' VILLAGE 8 DAYS

Office Secretary Suffers Hardships in Jungle of Ecuador

CLEVELAND.—A sojourn—interesting, if not pleasant—in a head-hunters' village is one of the adventures Bernice Goetz experienced in her recent trek through Ecuadorian jungles.

The dauntless, attractive, 28-year-old woman is employed in a Cleveland insurance office for 10 months of the year. The other two she spends on one-woman expeditions to uncivilized parts of the world.

"On my Ecuador trip I was deserted twice by my porters—once on the way back from the head-hunters' village, but I set out on foot alone through the jungle. At last I reached a village where I obtained a horse for the journey to Quito," Miss Goetz said.

Miss Goetz's travelogue is one replete with adventure. She said that she took a boat from New York to Guayaquil, Ecuador, and then went by rail to Quito, the "last outpost" of Ecuadorian civilization.

At Quito, a small town in the Andes with an altitude of 9,000 feet, she hired as guide Luis, who was half Spanish and half Jivaro and with whom she could speak Spanish. She and Luis rode horseback three days up into the mountains to the Paramos.

Fearful by Natives

"The Paramos is a weird place. It is a bitter cold area of coarse grass and constant winds," Miss Goetz said. "The natives fear it, as so many have died there. We saw their bones along the way."

"We finally reached Tena, a jungle village. Here we sent back our horses and pack mule with the arriero, who was a sort of porter who followed us on foot."

She said that at Tena Luis hired three porters and the party went on foot along the Napo river, a tributary of the Amazon.

"Everything was fine," Miss Goetz said, "until we came to where natives were panning gold. The lure of sudden riches was too much for our porters and they deserted us. Luis went out each day to find others, but none of them could be persuaded to leave his gold panning."

"I made a lean-to of palms and waited for someone to come along or the natives to become tired of searching for gold. On the fourth day of my residence in the improvised shelter I heard a shout and popped out of the hut to see a heavily bearded Englishman with two canoes and three Indians."

English Explorer Helps

"He wanted to know what I was doing stranded in the jungle and when I explained my plight he took Luis and me into his canoes down as far as the Rio Anzu. From here he went on to the Rio Tigre and turned inland toward Arapico, the Jivero city."

The woman explorer said that the Jiveros are the head hunters.

"The young men with their golden bronze skin were very handsome."

"The women were unkempt. They peered out at us through their long hair pulled over their faces."

"I stayed a night in each of eight different houses. With my supply of medicines I was able to help some of the women suffering from insect bites. This raised me in their estimation somewhat, but they never were friendly."

On the last night there was a drunken party in the house where Miss Goetz was staying, so she and her party left the head-hunter city the next day. She added that they could see it was time to leave because "the people were getting too familiar and looked threatening."

Catalina Island's Unique Quail Hunters' Delight

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.—The dream of every nimrod—a bag limit of the tastiest birds of the Pacific coast within an hour.

And that dream comes true every day for scores of hunters romping the hills of Santa Catalina island, opening to quail hunting this season for the first time in 30 years.

Such glowing reports pour in daily to state fish and game division here. An investigation revealed that the Santa Catalina quail is a species entirely peculiar to the island and is found nowhere else in the world.

The bird is 7 per cent larger than the mainland variety and more heavily scaled on the lower breast, with broader streaks on the flanks and lower tail coverts, according to reports.

Cleveland Driver Wields Bar Over 'Erring Fender'

CLEVELAND.—Louis Koszta had an automobile.

The automobile had a fender. And the fender, according to Louis, had a habit—a very annoying one. It was always bumping into things.

So, one night after Louis had been partaking, Patrolman Lad Rousal came upon him wielding a crowbar over the erring fender.

"It's that fender again," Louis explained. "It just smacked into that car ahead of me. I can't do a thing about that fender. It's always hitting things."

Louis received a suspended $50 fine and 60-day sentence with the agreement that he would junk the 1932 auto and pay for $15 damage done by the fender with the habit.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—A young swain's fearlessness landed him in police court.

"I'm not afraid of anybody. Just to show you," he said, "I'll knock down the first man that comes along."

He did.

DAD AND DAUGHTER UNITED BY RADIO

Girl, Lost 23 Years, Talks to Her Father.

HAMMOND, IND.—For the first time in 23 years, a father and a daughter are talking to each other with the aid of radio amateurs in Hammond, Ind., and Los Angeles.

It was only recently that Walter Baden of Hammond found the daughter who was taken from him by his wife at the time of their divorce nearly a quarter of a century ago.

She is Mrs. Olive Carolyn Klar of Los Angeles, widowed mother of a four-year-old child. But neither she nor Baden had enough money to go to the other.

V. L. Harnack of Hammond, operator of amateur radio station W9-LMO, and Ashby Stratton of Los Angeles, station W6TMM, arranged for two-way conversation.

When the first talk was arranged, Baden approached the mike in Harnack's home tremblingly. He heard the faint words:

"Hello, daddy, can't you hear me? This is Olive."

All the things Baden had planned to say fled from his mind. Tearfully, he cried:

"Olive."

"It's—it's nice weather out here," Olive said.

Then suddenly she burst out:

"Oh, daddy, why can't we see each other? I'm so poor I had to borrow six cents for an airmail stamp to mail you a letter."

"We'll see each other soon," Baden promised her. "I'll find the money some way. We'll talk again soon. I'm sure."

And he wasn't mistaken, for Harnack and Stratton have arranged for other conversations between the father and his long-lost daughter until the time when they can be reunited—in person.

STICK-TO-IT- IVE-NESS

By OSCAR SAUNDERS
© Associated Newspapers.
WNU Service.

"THAT young jackanapes has been here again!" Lucien Bancroft growled, coming into the house with the customary whitening block in his hand.

"Daddy!" his young daughter replied. "How did you know?"

"How could I help it? The place reeks with the odor of those smelly combinations he's always mixing."

"But, Daddy, he only wanted to show me—"

"See here, Mildred, I'm telling you for the last time, I forbid that boy the house. I'm not going to run the risk of being blown up any longer."

Lucien Bancroft, a power in the business world and a philanthropist at heart, hurried up the stairs to his private quarters, leaving his motherless daughter looking the picture of despair.

"That brainless idiot does make it hard for a fellow!" Bancroft told himself, closing the door and beginning to whistle into a convenient waste-basket.

"Mildred's in love with him up to the hilt and I've got to think up something right away to break it off."

Gerty Winthrop, the young jackanapes and brainless idiot referred to, was the son of an old friend of Bancroft's.

During the father's lifetime Gerry had caused that worthy gentleman no end of worry because he insisted upon continually brewing things and after his father's sudden demise, when he continued in this line of work instead of taking his rightful place, a place which should have meant careful preparation to take his father's place in the linen business, Bancroft, his father's old friend, was sorely troubled.

Today Bancroft was recalling how he had watched the prosperous Winthrop linen business slip almost to the verge of bankruptcy.

He remembered with a poignant throb of regret that once it had been his and Winthrop's dearest wish that their children should marry, but how could he give his only daughter into the keeping of a crazy young madman who was wasting his sustenance and his time on making worthless experiments?

Bancroft whittled away at his block of wood until it became a mere shaving.

Then he reached into a desk drawer for another whitening block.

ey, but I'll make up for it in the advertising I'll get."

"Well, of all the fools you're the worst! Twenty-five dollars for anything they would look at twice! Why, they'll make thousands out of each one! What in—"

Bancroft arose and in his excitement reached for the whitening block on the radiator.

He could not move it. He tried again—same result.

Then he saw a queer look and a crooked smile upon Gerry's face.

"What's the matter here?" he demanded harshly.

"You must have laid that wood on some of my new adhesive, Mr. Bancroft," the young man answered coolly, stifling a chuckle.

"I've just perfected it. I expect it to hold all the domes on the largest cathedrals in the world for centuries. I'm going to sell that to Sears & Lane, too—another twenty-five."

"You're going to do nothing of the sort, you young fool!" Bancroft yelled. "I'm going to back that discovery and we'll put it on the market ourselves. I'm not going to have gougiers like Sears & Lane walking away with anything more. Why, it sticks like all get out!"

Bancroft brought his hand down in emphasis upon the slab.

It met the same fate as the block of wood. He turned all colors of the rainbow, while his young friend endeavored vainly to choke his laughter.

"Laugh, you young nut!" Bancroft howled. "If you're so darn smart tell me how I'm going to get loose, if you can."

"That's easy," Gerry answered, laughing outright. "You don't suppose I'd invent a perfect adhesive without discovering a solvent for it, do you? It's only a mixture of vinegar, salt and ammonia, but it does the business all right."

"Say, young fellow," Bancroft began sheepishly as he rubbed his freed hand, "maybe it would be a good idea to apply some of this new stick-em-good to your future father-in-law's mouth occasionally when he gets too rambunctious, but be sure to have the solvent handy when it comes time to root for the product, and—er—I suppose you and Millie might as well begin to make your plans. When it comes to stick-to-it-iveness I've certainly got to hand it to you, boy!"

A plan for illuminating large areas of country by means of projecting radio waves upward has been evolved by Prof. V. A. Bailey, head of the experimental physics department at the University of Sydney.

Bailey said the scheme was to create a huge electric discharge in a 500-mile high cloud above the sleigh riding etc. w. g. similar to the one which caused the aurora.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I had been wanting some really handsome velvet roses to pep up an evening dress. I was thrilled to find in your Book 2, instructions for making them from materials I already had. I would also like to thank you for the knitted rag rug in Book 1. My Mother spent many happy hours making it last winter."

"I thought you might be interested in a luncheon set I have just finished. It was planned to go with a set of blue dishes. There are four mats and a long runner in medium blue linen with bands of old fashioned needle weaving in darker blue across the ends. Just two edges of the napkins are banded with the weaving."

We can imagine how attractive the table must be set with these mats and the blue dishes. Some of you who have pink dishes might like to try the same idea in tones of rose. Use a rather coarse linen. Prepare the work for the weaving by drawing out the fabric threads as for hemstitching. Each step is shown here in the diagram. Either linen or mercerized embroidery thread may be used.

TIPS to Gardeners

Flowers for a Purpose

GARDENERS want flowers for house bouquets, for beautification of the yard, or both. To be certain of an abundance of flowers for cutting throughout the growing months, however, the gardener need plant packets of only three or four of the following flowers:

Annuals—snapdragon, aster, callendula, calliopsis, candytuft, carnation, bachelor button, cosmos, dahlia, larkspur, annual lupin, marigold, nasturtium, salpiglossis and zinnia.

Perennials—columbine, coreopsis, gaillardia grandiflora, perennial lupin, pyrethrum (painted daisy) shasta daisy and delphinium.

For earliest bloom, the following are recommended by Gilbert Bentley, flower expert: Calliopsis and candytuft among the annuals, and coreopsis, delphinium and pyrethrum among the perennials.

For late-blooming cut flowers, grow zinnia, marigold, gaillardia, snapdragon, aster, cosmos and dahlia.

SAFETY TALKS

Mischievous Hands

MAYBE he picked up the habit about the time he couldn't resist pulling the pig-tails of the girl who sat ahead of him in grammar school. But even though they were more chivalrous in their school days, adult man (and woman) has a lot of trouble keeping his hands and fingers out of mischief.

The National Safety council reports that of all accidents suffered during 1937 by persons who were at work, 33 per cent were hand and finger cases. Legs and feet were injured in 24 per cent of the occupational accident cases. The human trunk was injured in 19 per cent, or the third largest, number of cases.

Other parts of the body and the frequency with which they were injured: arms, 11 per cent; head (other than eyes), 6 per cent; eyes, 2 per cent. The council said general accidents accounted for 5 per cent of the cases.

WEARING OF THE GREEN

St. Patrick's Day belongs to the Irish, to be sure, but it's a day of jollity and right good fellowship in which all can participate in the wearing of the green.

Indeed, it was St. Patrick himself who said, "The blessing of God upon you all!" And those warm greetings draw no restrictions!

But to the sons and daughters of Eire the day carries a special meaning. It's a day that does honor not only to a great missionary, but to the spirit of fiery patriotism which has long stirred the hearts and souls of Ireland's people. That patriotism is not hard to understand in a country so rich in legend, folklore, and beautiful folk songs, and having great poets and dramatists like Yeats and Lady Gregory to re-create those legends, and fine bards like McCormack to sing its native melodies.

But it's not only the children of Erin that can celebrate on such a day of good fellowship, for one of her very own minstrels has declared:

"And the earth below is gay

With its tender green today,

For the whole world is Irish on the Seventeenth of March!"

LITTLE GRAY HOMES

Those little gray homes in the West are beginning to really do things for recovery, and not only in the West, but elsewhere, too!

Homes, to the number of 356,000 units, and at a cost of $1,330,000,000, reports the U. S. Department of Labor were built in 1938—an increase of 23 per cent in number. If the accelerated trend of the last nine months continues, residential building this year promises to show a 50 per cent increase over 1938. Those little gray homes are great producers!

Easter Party For Children Planned At Castlewood Club

With the opening Spring activity at Castlewood Country Club, a St. Patrick's tournament and corn beef and cabbage dinner at the 19th hole, a successful event of the past week, plans are under way for the annual Easter party for children on April 9 and the opening of the Roman pool on April 16, weather permitting.

Iran, Egypt Royalty Wed In Splendor

CAIRO. — A wedding ceremony whose complexities and magnificence outshine any in modern history is uniting 17-year-old Princess Fawzia of Egypt and the youthful crown prince of Iran (Persia). Celebrations started long before March 16, the wedding date, and will continue long after, to be culminated April 21 in a second marriage ritual in Teheran, Iran capital.

Important because it unites the two most influential Mohammedan nations, the wedding is nevertheless said to be a love match since the prince and princess met during a winter sports expedition to Switzerland. A million Egyptians are participating in the gayety of Cairo, a three-day holiday having been proclaimed following the wedding.

A royal welcome, aerial and military escorts and special trains featured the prince's arrival in Egypt. In his honor the tomb of Mohammed Ali—founder of the present Egyptian dynasty—was reconstructed at a cost of $250,000.

The royal couple are being accompanied by Egyptian Queen Mother Nazli on their honeymoon trip to Shahpour, Iran. There they will be met by the empress of Iran and two of her daughters. The party will travel by special train to Teheran for four days of wedding celebration beginning April 21. On April 24 the prince will take his bride to their permanent residence, the marble palace. Since this date is the anniversary of the accession to the throne of the shah of Persia, it will have a double significance this year.

Princess Fawzia, westernized like Egypt's beautiful young queen, Farida, is well versed in her native Arabic and speaks excellent English and French. Her next problem will be learning modern Persian, her new native tongue.

English Explorer Helps.
"He wanted to know what I was doing stranded in the jungle when I explained my plight he told Luis and me into his canoes down as far as the Rio Anzu. From here he went on to the Rio Tigre and turned inland toward Arapico, the Jivero city."

"The woman explorer said that the Jiveros are the head hunters. "The young men with their golden bronze skin were very handsome. "The women were unkempt. They peered out at us through their long hair pulled over their faces.

"I stayed a night in each of eight different houses. With my supply of medicines I was able to help some of the women suffering from insect bites. This raised me in their estimation somewhat, but they never were friendly."

On the last night there was a drunken party in the house where Miss Goetz was staying, so she and her party left the head-hunter city the next day. She added that they could see it was time to leave because "the people were getting too familiar and looked threatening."

Catalina Island's Unique Quail Hunters' Delight

SACRAMENTO, CALIF. — The dream of every nimrod—a bag limit of the tastiest birds of the Pacific coast within an hour.

And that dream comes true every day for scores of hunters romping the hills of Santa Catalina island, opening to quail hunting this season for the first time in 30 years.

Such glowing reports pour in daily to state fish and game division here. An investigation revealed that the Santa Catalina quail is a species entirely peculiar to the island and is found nowhere else in the world.

The bird is 7 per cent larger than the mainland variety and more heavily scaled on the lower breast, with broader streaks on the flanks and lower tail coverts, according to reports.

Cleveland Driver Wields Bar Over 'Erring Fender'

CLEVELAND.—Louis Koszta had an automobile.

The automobile had a fender. And the fender, according to Louis, had a habit—a very annoying one. It was always bumping into things.

So, one night after Louis had been partaking, Patrolman Lad Rousal came upon him wielding a crowbar over the erring fender.

"It's that fender again," Louis explained. "It just smacked into that car ahead of me. I can't do a thing about that fender. It's always hitting things."

Louis received a suspended $50 fine and 60-day sentence with the agreement that he would junk the 1932 auto and pay for $15 damage done by the fender with the habit.

CHAPTER I

Mary looked about the living room with mingled emotions of affection and despair. Phrony had just completed the first thorough cleaning it had undergone in two months, and the place did not seem quite as cluttered as usual. The woodwork and furniture had been polished with something Aunt Mamie had bought from a door-to-door salesman; the windows shone from yesterday's washing; the nap of the Axminster "nine-by-twelve" positively stood up as a result of Phrony's vigorous sweeping with the ancient, but still active, vacuum cleaner. Holly wreaths, tied with rather too narrow red ribbon, hung at each window, while Aunt Mamie now labored over the arrangement of a bunch of the same leaves for a vase on the mantel.

"The house looks more festive than it has for years," Mary remarked happily. "Christmas decorations certainly help."

Aunt Mamie compressed her thin lips. "Not half as much as a good, first class cleaning," she replied. "Why your mother puts up, year after year, with incompetent help is beyond my understanding. Of course, this isn't my house, and it's not up to me to interfere."

Mary's young shoulders straightened defiantly. "You know why Mother puts up with incompetent help, as you call it, Aunt Mamie. Phrony's the only maid we can get in Hawkinsville who'll look for this big family, and clean, and wash, for five dollars a week."

Aunt Mamie, her father's maiden sister, was getting more and more on Mary's nerves as the years went on. She had been dependent on Mother and Daddy's hospitality for two decades now, yet she eternally found fault with Mrs. Loring's housekeeping, criticized the conduct of Mary, her eighteen-year-old sister Ellen, and their harum-scarum and adorable little brother, Peter; complained constantly about her health, which, as far as the Loring's could determine, was about on a par with that of a truck horse; continually referred to the purely imaginary men she might have married. In fact, as time had worn on, Mamie's illusory suitors had become more and more real in Mamie's mind, increasingly ardent in their affection for her; their words, never actually spoken, their deeds never actually committed, more and more colorful and graphic in her frequent recitals of them.

Mrs. Loring, always eager to avert unpleasant feeling, eternally seeking peace at the cost of any concession she might make, forced a smile to her lips. "How charming everything looks!" she exclaimed brightly. "I know Linnie and Lelia will think the house is sweet. It's been years since they've seen it, you know."

Mamie turned about, and gazed dolefully at her sister-in-law. "Too many years, I'd say," she remarked. "Seems to me a woman that was born and raised in Hawkinsville would see fit to return to her home town a little oftener; but, of course, Linnie always was a gadder."

Mrs. Loring flushed to the roots of her dark hair. "Well, why shouldn't she be a gadder, Mamie? She has no ties, whatsoever; she loves to travel, and she has a very nice income."

Mary hadn't seen her mother's sister, Linnie Cotswell, for ten years, but she was quite willing to fly to her defense. "I think she's a darned good sport," she said defiantly. "and if I were in her shoes, I'd live just the sort of life she's chosen to live—Europe in the summer, New York in the autumn, Florida for the winter."

"And dashing about, spending other people's money, like a drunken sailor!" Mamie persisted, the tip of her long thin nose twitching convulsively.

Mrs. Loring seated herself in one of the armchairs by the round center table, and with apparent calm, picked up the Hawkinsville Journal, fluttered it open, and pretended to read the headlines. "The money Linnie spends is her own," she said, her eyes fixed unseeing on the print. "It was bequeathed to her—by several different people."

Intrigued by this revelation, Mary asked, "How come, Mother?"

"Stop saying 'how come,' Mary! I've told you again and again that I hate that expression. Well, when your Grandfather Cotswell died, Linnie was the only one of us who had not married, and he naturally felt that what money he had should go to her. He thought—that since all the rest of his daughters had husbands, we would, of course, be provided for."

"Dirty trick, I'd say!" sniffed Mamie. "I can't see why one daughter should have been singled out. How did he know Linnie wouldn't later marry some man that'd outshine the husbands of all the others? Too bad he didn't set aside a tidy sum for you, Janet."

Mrs. Loring's eyes clouded. "Jim was a very promising young lawyer at the time, Mamie. My father had no reason to believe that—that we would later have to struggle—as we have had to do."

"We're having a very nice dinner," Mrs. Loring went on, trying valiantly to avert a clash. "I bought a lovely roast beef at Haubert's, and Phrony's going to try Mrs. Upham's recipe for French-frying those little hearts of cauliflower."

Mamie's eyes glittered with anticipation. She was inordinately fond of food, although she was constantly telling how little she ate. Even hearing about a meal was a pleasure, and now being informed that beef and cauliflower were in store for her, her attention was diverted from the topic of the inconvenience caused by Linnie Cotswell's and Lelia Ormsby's visit.

"Mother, are you going to the station with Dad, or shall I?"

"You go, darling. I know you can hardly wait to see Aunt Linnie."

Five minutes later, Mary was speeding through the wintry dusk,

"And I can manage the other six," said Christopher Cragg.

Up Concert street to Seventh, down Seventh to Main, and up the rather dirty brown steps that led to her father's dingy law offices in the Cactus building. A light snow had begun to drift earthwards, and to cover the little town with a magic carpet of white.

James Loring was seated at his desk when Mary, without knocking, opened the door of his office. He was alone, his one office assistant being Ellen, who had left an hour before to do some last-minute Christmas shopping. A green-shaded electric bulb shone down upon his thinning hair and the well-thumbed law book over which he was poring. "Poor Daddy," Mary thought, a quick hard lump filling her throat, "sitting here in this dreary old office the afternoon before Christmas, and reading up on a case that was probably tried somewhere fifty years ago! Well, it's a good thing the railroad keeps him on as their local attorney. Heaven knows, his cases of any other sort are few and far between."

He glanced up as she entered, his face lighting with a smile as he saw how smart she looked in the new fur coat she had bought from her own savings, and the little hat that dipped rakishly over one eye. "How pretty you look, my dear!" he exclaimed, rising from his chair with that old-world courtliness which he extended even to his female children. "It must be getting colder. Your cheeks are almost crimson, and your eyes positively sparkle."

Mary put her gloved hand on his arm. "If my eyes are sparkling, Daddy, it's because of Aunt Linnie's coming—and not the weather conditions, although it is getting snappier every minute outdoors. Hurry, Dad, and close up shop. The train's due now in ten minutes. Good heavens, I don't believe you're at all excited over the arrival of our prodigal relatives!"

Mary linked one arm through her father's as the train blustered in. They were coming! They were coming! Those creatures from another world! Suddenly, she caught sight of them through the snow-splattered windows of the Pullman.

Mary pressed forward, reaching Miss Cotswell as she stepped to the ground. "Aunt Linnie!" she exclaimed. "Aunt Linnie!"

Linnie Cotswell caught her in a swift, fragrant embrace, kissed her lightly, then wheeled about to the porter. "Are you sure all my bags are here?" And, being assured that her six, and Lelia's three pieces, of pigskin luggage were duly piled together, she returned her attention to Mary. "My dear!" she exclaimed. "What a lovely young woman you've grown to be! This is Mary, isn't it? Darling, you were terrible in glasses and dental braces the last time I saw you! And Jim! Dear old Jim, how nice it is to see you! And, of course, you know this is Lelia!"

Lelia, one lovely blue eye almost obscured from view by the dipping fur of the Cossack hat, extended a hand, first to Mary, and then to James Loring.

The train began chug-chugging its way from the station, and Linnie, glancing at her brother-in-law, sensed his dismay. "Poor Jim," she laughed, "are you wondering why in the world we brought so many bags? Well, six of them are mine. When a woman reaches my age, you know, she simply has to carry about a lot of clothes, and astringents and cold creams in order to be constantly warding off the ravages of time. Isn't there a redcap in the place?"

Mary laughed. "Not one in a carload, Aunt Linnie, but I can manage at least three of those gorgeous bags. I'm young and strong and willing, as they always say in advertisements."

"And I can manage the other six," said Christopher Cragg, appearing suddenly from behind a baggage truck. "Why not let me take all of them in my car?"

"And why not?" retorted Mary, although her heart skipped a beat as it always so foolishly did when she came upon the young doctor unexpectedly. "Aunt Linnie, this is Christopher Cragg. Mrs. Ormsby, Doctor Cragg."

Five minutes later, James Loring's car, carrying the three women, was crawling discreetly up Johnson Street hill, while Christopher Cragg's sedan, filled to the roof with luggage, followed sedately.

"Where in the world did that young giant come from?" Linnie Cotswell demanded. "If only I were thirty years younger, I'd fall in love with him. He's not a Hawkinsville man, is he, Jim?"

"He's not from a Hawkinsville family," Mr. Loring returned, his eyes ahead of him as he piloted his old car towards Main street, "but he's chosen to live here. Old Doctor Ehinger died a year ago, you know, and this chap happened to finish his internship at the Henrotin Hospital in Chicago just at that time. Well, he had gone to Harvard with one of the Johnstone boys, so Johnstone, knowing Doctor Cragg was looking for an opening in a small town, wrote him about the practice and the office and the little house Doctor Ehinger had left without a head. Cragg dashed right down to Hawkinsville and bought out the whole works from Jessie."

"But, Jim," asked Linnie, "wasn't Doctor Ehinger's equipment terribly antiquated? I can't see how a doctor just starting off in life could put up with it."

"It was simply incredible," interpolated Mary. "Chris has thrown most of it out, and bought beautiful new stuff. Everything is white tile and gleaming metal now. It seems he went through the deal with Miss Jessie just as a matter of good will, and really he's profiting by it. All the younger people in town are taking their children to him."

"Even so," Linnie Cotswell said meditatively, "he can't expect to make a fortune in a town of this size. After all, a city's the place for a modern young doctor."

"Most people think he's just a little too modern for their tastes," returned Jim Loring. "After all, the old ways are the best."

"Oh, fiddlesticks," Linnie Cotswell chortled. "Why, isn't this your house?"

Mrs. Loring had lighted the place from top to bottom, and the freshly washed windows cast shafts of brightness into the night. It was evident she had been watching for the car to turn the corner, for she stood waiting in the doorway.

"What will Lelia Ormsby think of our home?" Mary asked herself.

Kruger National Park Modeled After Yellowstone; Has Variety of Animals

It may not be home on the range but Kruger National park is perhaps the world's greatest playground of deer, antelope and all the astonishing variety of Africa's wild life.

Roughly as large as the state of Massachusetts and more than twice the size of Yellowstone National park, after which it was modeled, Kruger National park contains within its bounds probably a greater diversity of wild life than can be found in any like area the world over, according to a correspondent.

Noah himself would be surprised at the variety of wild life the park boasts. Elephants, rhinoceroses, hipopotamuses, giraffes, warthogs, zebras, bushbys, buffalos, wildebeests, impalas, kudus, antelopes, tsessebes, elands, reedbucks, lions, cheetahs, baboons, not to mention scores of kinds of wild birds, inhabit it.

Lions are always numerous and signs gravely warn travelers against teasing them. Good-natured and lazy when not frightened or hungry, lions often lie in the middle of the park's roads, refusing to budge until automobiles are almost upon them. They do not associate man with the automobile and travelers are perfectly safe from them while driving through the park.

Cheetahs are often seen, as are packs of wild dogs. Zebras are numerous. So are blue wildebeests, which are found in great herds and are comparatively tame. Hippopotamuses may be seen in the rivers, and crocodiles inhabit even the small pools, so that swimming in the park is unsafe.

Tsessebes, cousins of the hartebeest, are plentiful, but hartebeests themselves are becoming rare in Africa. While they are protected by law in the park, the natives beyond its boundaries have discovered that the animal's tail makes a fine fly swatter, and they have killed many hartebeests off, peddling the tails.

'Pegleg' Smith

FOR an example of chilled steel nerve, consider the case of Thomas L. Smith. He and his partner, Jim Cockrell, were trapping in the Green river country of Wyoming in the 1820's when Smith fell over a cliff and broke his leg. It was not an ordinary fracture. The bone was shattered and a piece of it protruded through the flesh. Prompt action was necessary to prevent blood poisoning.

"Guess we'll have to cut 'er off, Jim," said Tom Smith, calmly.

Their only instruments were a three-cornered file and their hunting knives. Cockrell used the file to make a saw of Smith's knife. Then Smith took his partner's knife, cut through the flesh, tied up the arteries, sawed the bone, seared it with a red-hot iron and sewed up the stump.

When the wounded leg healed, Smith made a wooden leg for himself and thereafter he was known as "Pegleg" Smith. Before the accident he had been a famous horseman. Now there was all the more reason for going mounted and the wooden leg apparently made little difference in his horsemanship.

At any rate he became the most successful horse thief on a large scale in the history of the West. He spent most of his time organizing expeditions into California to rob the Spaniards. He and the famous Jim Beckworth made one foray into the land of the dons that netted them 3,000 head of horses!

But when California came under the Stars and Stripes it changed the habits of "Pegleg." "I won't never steal from my fellow-Americans," he declared virtuously. Temperance, however, was not among his newly acquired virtues. He ended his days, a victim of strong drink, in San Francisco in 1886.

A Perilous Journey

CAPT. RANDOLPH B. MARCY halted with his party of 40 soldiers and 25 mountain men at the junction of the Uncompahgre and Gunnison rivers on his way to Fort Union, N. M., in 1857. "Me no guide you over San Juan mountains in winter time," declared the old Ute Indian chief.

Capt Marcy had orders to join the forces of Col. Albert Sidney Johnston near Salt Lake City with animals and supplies. The orders said to proceed without delay so there was nothing for Captain Marcy to do except proceed. In spite of the Indian warning that none of the men would get through Cochitopa pass alive, the party left December 11 for Fort Massachusetts near the present Fort Garland.

Four days later, when they reached the mountains, winter's fiercest storms were raging. Snow swirled and beat against their faces. It piled in deep drifts and hung heavily on the legs of animals and men. The cold became intense.

Captain Marcy's detachment pushed on, although animals fell dead in their tracks and men had to abandon equipment. Before they reached even the summit of the pass their rations were exhausted and they had to eat the flesh of the mules as the animals died.

On January 12 couriers from a relief party arrived and announced that help was close at hand. Shortly thereafter aid came. So starved were the men that Captain Marcy issued strict warnings to eat sparingly.

His orders evidently were only partly obeyed as one man died from overeating—the only fatality in one of the most trying adventures of American history.

The Scholar-Builder

IN 1798 Gabriel Richard, a French priest, arrived in Detroit, whose muddy streets were lined with log huts and shacks housing its 1,200 inhabitants. But most shocking of all to Pere Richard, who had been a teacher in France, was the utter lack of educational opportunities for the children of the village.

With what funds he had, he founded private schools and began a campaign to establish public schools. Music was lacking, so he gave the people their first organ, brought piece by piece on pack horses almost 1,000 miles through the wilderness. He succeeded in getting Detroit its first public library.

He made a journey to Washington to get federal funds for other projects and brought a printing press with him when he returned. With it he established the first newspaper in Michigan.

In the election of 1823, Pere Richard was chosen delegate to congress from the Michigan territory which included all of Wisconsin and Iowa, part of Minnesota and a small strip of Ohio.

When the Asiatic cholera swept the city in 1832, Pere Richard visited the sick and dying without thought of himself. He died September 12, the last victim of the epidemic, and leaving behind him many monuments of accomplishment.

MAYBE SO

"Ma'am, may I be excused today? I'm not feeling well. Your husband let me fall off his lap."

"What?"

"Oh! I assure you ma'am it was accidental!"

SHE'S AN EXPERT

MEOW-OW-OW

"She's unpleasant, but dresses out of sight. She has a wonderful coat of fur."

SUSPECTING PAPA

Daughter—I never knew a town to be so full of gossipers as this! Dad—What indiscretion have you committed now?

MAY BRING IT BACK

"Mrs. Boyle is playing a mean trick on her husband."

"What is it?"

"He has been entirely bald for years and she is going to give him a book on the care of the hair."

HONK, HONK!

"I do wish you'd buy a new car, Pa. The old one is getting so shabby that I'm ashamed to be seen in it."

"Good. Now maybe I'll get a chance to use it myself occasionally."

SO INVITING

Mr. Justwed—This dessert tastes so queer. How did you make it? His Bride—I just followed the recipe in the book only I used the meringue you put on your face every morning when you shave.

The milkweed, like the thistle and some of Nature's other adventurers, sends its seed tufts out on aerial voyages of discovery. Slung beneath each downy tuft, like a balloonist's basket, is a brown seed. When the pod frees the tufts, the first vagrant puff of wind carries these tiny balloons with their colonizing seeds high and far. Later they drop to earth to found a new colony, or, if the winds will, they even may float into a window, high above the earth, their logical destiny unfulfilled.

Ancient Polish Customs

Festivals at Christmas and other holidays, the Polish peasants' ancient customs and folklore traditions call for the wearing of some unusual old costumes retained through many years. At the end of harvest, the tenants present the owners of their lands with baskets and flowers and corn, and the dances performed in his presence are a quaint and colorful display.

Names of Some Phobias

Scotland's Kirriemuir

This little teacup of a village by the Scottish moors was the playground of Barrie. This is "Thru," and the cradle of the Kailyard school of Scottish story-telling. Here the quaintness that is Barrie lies on every hill which runs down to the village market place. "The Wagoner in Thru," the object of many tourist eyes, never was visited on the inside by Barrie. From behind almost any tree, tourists expect to see the "little moonster" and the gypsy girl, while but four miles away is Glamis castle, of Macbeth fame and more recently the ancestral estate of Queen Elizabeth of England.

Joke Backfired

The story is told that several telegraphers in Boston played a joke on Thomas A. Edison when he was a young man, but the joke was on them. Young Edison had just gotten a job as operator and the other operators were amused at this westerner's rusticness. So they asked a veteran operator in New York to send the newcomer a message at rapid-fire speed so they could watch him sweat. But Edison took the message with no difficulty and, doubtless suspecting something, sent a message back at a faster rate than the one he had just received.

Wilbur

Wilbur, Teutonic and Anglo-Saxon in origin, means "bright resolve," which might be interpreted "gay courage" -- surely an auspicious omen for the Wilburs, since that quality makes for success in any endeavor. Wilbur O. Atwater (1844-1907), chemist, pioneer in agricultural experiment station work, was first director of the experimental stations and chief of the nutrition investigations of the department of agriculture. His work was of incalculable benefit to the American people.

The Draft Riots

In 1863 there was an outbreak in New York city occasioned by resistance to the drafting of New Yorkers into the Union army. The mob held possession of the city for four days, the absence of the militia at the front leaving only police protection. It is estimated that more than 1,000 persons were killed, and that damage to the extent of $1,500,000 was done during the riots.

'Bottled-in-Bond'

Bottled in bond means that the liquor has been put in casks and stored in a government warehouse for four or more years. The year is usually indicated on the seal. Under United States bond regulations, no other whisky or neutral spirits may be added during aging or before bottling.

Figure This Out Yourself

If you worked for one cent the first day and had your salary doubled every day, at the end of one month (thirty days) your day's pay would amount to $5,368,709.12.

Courting Mirror

A courting mirror was a small wood-framed mirror, usually pine, with a picture over the glass. It was a conventional courting gift in America in the Eighteenth century.

THE TRUTH
SIMPLY TOLD

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, surely must be accepted as evidence of satisfactory use. And favorable public opinion supports that of the able physicians who test the value of Doan's under exacting laboratory conditions. If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove waste that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole body suffers when kidneys lag, and diuretic medication would be more often employed. Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be warning of disturbed kidney function. You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes--feel weak, nervous, all played out. Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won world-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Ask your neighbor!
